

Nonprofit willing to house any livestock in danger due to fire

Posted: Jul 1, 2012 5:05 PM by Christina Lysacek - MTN News

Updated: Jul 2, 2012 7:46 AM

We first told you on Thursday about the Belgrade non-profit who has offered to take in horses in danger of being harmed by wildfires, well now they have extended that offer to all livestock.

The Montana Awareness Education and Equine Rehab Association, or MAERA, has room to take in close to 400 more animals and they say they are willing to drive to pick up your animals even if you are a few states away.

"If you are at risk and fire is coming your way, don't wait. We're here, we're available. We'll transport horses, livestock; we'll transport them back even if its six hours later and your area gets cleared. A part of these fires that makes things so difficult is that they can move so quickly," said Sasha Hyland, MAERA's Executive Director.

MAERA will feed and house your livestock for free for the rest of fire season if need be. If you're interested in using their services or volunteering you may contact Hyland directly at (406) 600-3756 or the ranch phone (406) 551-4913.